A posse under the direction of Sheriff J. J. McGrath, State Narcotic Inspectors George Furgeson, C. E. Carter and Frank H. Benson on Sunday night raided a Chinese opium smoking den in the heart of San Mateo. In addition to the arrests the officers succeeded in confiscating several boxes of opium, several pipes and lamps and a quantity of yin gee, the burnt opium which is mixed with a little fresh opium, powdered tea leaves and water ,and resold. A scale used by Yee Chew in measuring out the opium was also confiscated.

Both men were released on bail and now face trial on charges of violating the state narcotic act.

PLAN MANY EVENTS AT MENLO CIRCUS

Country Fair To Be Unusual Feature

With the final days of preparation now under way the Menlo Circus Club presents a three-ring circus picture with trick ponies working in the sawdust ring, thoroughbreds warming up on the adjoining race track and pole experts thundering over the turf enclosure.

Several hundred principals will take part in the five-day fiesta, starting Saturday with the famous Menlo Children's Circus. On the same day there will also be a county fair. In both of these events the children will have full charge with all proceeds going toward the Stanford Home for Convalescent Children.

Clarence Walter, ringmaster, is holding daily rehearsals of the circus. This is now in its ninth year and the youngsters, all of the most socially prominent families of the peninsula, have developed professional skill. One of the features of the county fair will be a pet show, coupled with many concessions designed to entertain the youngsters.

Music for the circus will be furnished by the Sciots of San Mateo and the clown acts by the Sciots of San Francisco. Mrs. A. G. C. Hahn is chairman of the circus and Mrs. DeLancy Lewis is chairman of the county fair. Luncheon is to be served in the open. The fair begins at noon, followed by the circus at three o'clock.

Polo will be the feature Sunday Monday and Tuesday, followed by the races on the afternoon of the Fourth. With nearly two score of entries in the races, including some of the finest thoroughbreds in the west, this event, while amateur in character, promises some big thrills, it is declared. Many purses and trophies will be offered.

Young Redwood Man Married Sunday

At the home of his parents on Brewster street Sunday afternoon, Melvin Pollard took as his wife, Miss Margurite Sobey of San Francisco. The ceremony was performed by Rev. John Cavanaugh of Mt. Carmel Catholic and was witnessed by the immediate relatives and a few close friends.

The Pollard home was artistically decorated for the occasion, and following the wedding was the scene of a reception and dinner. The young people left in the evening for a honeymoon to be spent in the southern part of the state.

Mrs. Pollard is a charming young lady of San Francisco with many friends in the metropolis. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Pollard of this city. He is a graduate of the Sequoia Union High School, and for some time was connected with a large engineering firm in San Francisco. He is now associated with his father in the construction business in this city.

Ambitious Boy Causes Trouble

By CLAUDE FOX

No one will ever contend that litle four-year old Billy Genochio, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Genochio of this city, is not ambitious, or that when he reaches manhood he will not be a go-getter, for the latent qualifications in his make-up, which makes many successful, while others are driven to destruction, developed rapidly in the youngster last Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Genochio was engaged in her household duties at her cottage on Washington street and Master Billy was playing on the front porch. It was three o'clock and the newsboys were already exercising their lungs on the street. The mother stepped out the door to find her child missing. A general search about the neighborhood gave no results. Then things began to hum. With a distracted mother, a half dozen volunteers, the telephone girls and all of Chief Collin's men on the job little Billy was surely being sought with a frenzy, but it was half an hour before the missing boy was picked up on lower Broadway. With an evening paper in his hands which he had found at some doorway he was trudging along all unmindful of the commotion he was creating and was just just about to call out "extra" when found by an acquaintance. He was soon back in his mother's arms, but the re-union was both pleasant and sad—happiness for one ,but for Master Billy it was quite different. For the balance of the afternoon he preferred to stand than to sit down, and when a certain part of his anatomy had become normal he made many tearful promises to never wander again and endeavor to compete with the "extra" boys of the street.

DRUNKEN DRIVER NOW HELD IN JAIL

Well Known Rancher Killed by Automobile

Struck by a hit-and-run driver, while crossing the coastside road at Halfmoon Bay, Antone Bello, 79, one of the best known artichoke raisers of Halfmoon Bay, was instantly killed Tuesday evening. Bello was crossing the road near his farm on the coastside road when he was struck by a car driven by L. B. Aranguena of 2 Guererro street, San Francisco. The car did not stop.

Traffic Officer Jack Quinlan and Constable Fred Simmons gave chase and found the car wrecked at the side of the road not far from the scene of the accident. In the car were the driver and a woman who gave her name as Mrs. Hyantha Lindsay of the same address. Both were placed under arrest. Aranguena was charged with three counts, manslaughter, driving while intoxicated, and failure to render aid. Mrs. Lindsay was charged with being intoxicated. An inquest was held at the Synder Undertaking Parlos in Halfmoon Bay Wednesday evening.

At the inquest several verbal threats were made by the angry crowd against the driver of the death car, and only by the vigilance of the deputy sheriffs who had Aranguena in charge were attempts to lynch him made futile. The verdict of the pury was that Bello had come to his death by being struck by a car believed to have been driven by Aranguena. The driver will be given a preliminary hearing before Justice of the Peace Wightman on Tuesday.

Bello was a native of the Azore Islands and was of Portuguese extraction. For at least 55 years he had been a resident of the coastside section and was intimately identified with the community. He was one of the originators of the society which 45 45 years ago instituted the Chamorita as an annual event among the Portuguese residents of the coastside. Te event is still an annual event and attracts many visitors to Halfmoon Bay each year.

Surviving the aged man are five sons and two daughters. They are Mrs. Antone Joseph, Mrs. Annie Picchi, Manuel L., Frank L., Antone L., and Joe Bello, all of Halfmoon Bay, and Victor Bello of Novato, Marin county.

California will be represented at the national rifle matches at Camp Perry, O., August 26 to September 16, by a team of thirteen marksmen selected at competitive shoots, Adjutant General R. E. Mittelstaedt has announced. Northern California riflemen will compete for places at Leona Heights, Oakland, and southern residents at Burbank. Both matches will be June 30 and July 1. M. C. Dolson, San Leandro, and N. E. Cutting, Los Angeles, have charge of the tryouts.

On July 1 California will launch the first scientific attempt of the state government to cure and rehabilitate narcotic drug addicts. The first state narcotic hospital is to be opened on that date in Los Angeles county, a few miles from Pomona. Earl E. Jensen, state director of institutions, in direct charge of the new humanitarian undertaking, has secured the services of Dr. Thomas F. Joyce of New York City as medical superintendent of the hospital.

"When meaner and wickeder bucking horses are raised, Ukiah cowboys will ride them," is the slogan that comes from Ukiah as their seventh annual rodeo is nearing the starting date of July 1, 2, 3 and 4. Many well known performers will participate in this rodeo which will endeavor to revive the colorful early wild west days of three-quarters of a century ago, when the Redwood Empire was accessible only by horse trail and was inhabited by a few hardy western pioneers. Arrangements to house the crowds who are expected for this event are practically completed, the Redwood Highway Association announced.

A plan to organize a state system in California which would be the most up-to-date unit of its kind in America will be placed before the 1929 legislature, it was revealed last week. Charles E. Hand, former sheriff of El Dorado county, is the designer of the plan which will be presented to the legislature by Assemblyman H. E. Dillenger of Placer county and Percy West of Sacramento. Under the Hand plan the new department would be placed under the state division of motor vehicles and would incorporate the present state traffic officers, the fish and game wardens, many of the present county deputy sheriffs.

Twenty-five California millionaires died during the last year, but the Federal government still classes this state as fourth in the nation in number of men whose wealth has reached the $1,000,000 mark or better. This was announced recently by State Controller Ray L. Riley, who added that "California has become an outstanding market for securities as a result of the amount of wealth concentrated on the Pacific Coast." The largest estate handled by Riley's department during the last year in collection of inheritance taxes was that of Arabella Huntington of Los Angeles, approximately $20,000,000. During the last year, Riley said, the state government collected inheritance taxes totaling $11,000,000,000.

The longest non-stop flight in history will be attempted in July by Dr. Hugo Eckner, famous Zepplin builder, who will pilot a huge dirigible from Friederichshafen, Germany, to the Pacific Southwest Exposition at Long Beach, a distance of approximately 10,000 miles. Definite word of Eckner's plan for this journey reached Mayor Oscar Hauge of Long Beach a few days ago and preparations were made to provide a temporary mooring mast at the exposition grounds. In attempting this remarkable air cruise, the dirigible will cross two-thirds of Europe, the Atlantic Ocean and the entire American continent.

Text books in use in California elementary and high schools are free from the propaganda of power trusts or any other organizations, in the opinion of Sam H. Cohn, deputy state superintendent of public instruction. Selection of the books is made only after a thorough investigation by the text book committee for just such propaganda, Cohn said. "If anybody can show us that there is any objectionable material in any book in use in California schools, we will take steps to eliminate it," the school man stated.

Chances of former Governor Friend W. Richardson or any other opponent of United States Senator Hiram W. Johnson at the forthcoming primary election are "pretty hopeless." That opinion was expressed by Governor C. C. Young a few days ago upon receipt of reports that Richardson has filed papers in Los Angeles announcing his candidacy for the Republican senatorial nomination. "My only surprise," said Governor Young, "is that any one politically shrewd would want to undertake the race against Senator Johnson."

Operation of automobiles by persons whose licenses have been revoked will not be tolerated by the state, and a maximum punishment of 90 days in jail will henceforth be sought for every motorist caught attempting to sidestep the law. Frank G. Snook, chief of the division of motor vehicles, made this announcement a few days ago.

Attorney John P. Doran, who for the last six months has worked for the passage of the San Francisco Bay Bridge bills in Washington, arrived in San Francisco last week confident that the bills will be passed at the December session of Congress, and expressed the opinion that borings for the foundation will actually be in progress before this time next year.

Approximately $22,500,000 has been spent in purchase of 5000 homes and 250 farms for World War veterans who joined the colors in California, according to figures furnished by the State Veterans' Welfare Board. George M. Stout, secretary of the board, said that the statistics would indicate that comparatively few of the ex-service men were returning to the soil, but the board has been swamped with requests for assistance in home building.

Amendment of the crippled children's act to relieve those seeking aid under the statue from paying filing fees in connection with legal phases of the work, will be asked of the 1929 Legislature, the Department of Public Health has announced. The law provides medical and surgical attention for children whose parents or guardians are unable to help them, but before gaining aid a court certificate must be obtained.

California's total estimated daily average crude oil production fell off 2,300 barrels during the week ended June 16, figures released by the American Petroleum Institute show. The total estimated daily average crude oil production for the week of the report was 642,600 barrels as against 644,800 barrels for the week ended June 9.

Unless additional funds are provided, at least 10,000 California World War veterans seeking state aid in purchase of farms or homes will receive nothing. George M. Stout, secretary of the State Veterans' Welfare Board, announced this last week. He declared that present state bond funds for soldier aid will be exhausted by the end of this year, and plainly indicated he believes another bond issue is justified.

California's memorial to her sons and daughters who served their country during the World War is to be unveiled with impressive ceremonies on July 24, under thee auspices of the California State American Legion. Governor C. C. Young and Phil Dodson, state commander of the American Legion will be the principal speakers. This California memorial, already completed, is situated at the California-Nevada line in the Truckee canyon on United States highway line No. 40, and consists of an impressive masonry base surmounted by a bronze American eagle poised over its nest and young in an attitude of defense symbolical of that protection which the United States gave its sons and daughters.

Irving Martin, chairman of the state tax commission, announced last week that in all probability that body will arrive at a determination of a tax plan for intangible securities and state and national banks within the next few weeks, and will recommend that Governor C. C. Young call a special session of the state legislature to make the tax system immediately effective. At the present time there is no valid tax against banks and no taxation at all levied on intangible securities or solvent credits. The special legislative session, if called by the governor, probably will be held during the summer.

The state law creating the state pension commission, while setting July 1, 1928, as the date upon which that body should file its report with the legislature and the governor, is not necessarily mandatory in that provision. This opinion was given by Attorney General U. S. Webb last week to W. A. Johnstone, chairman of the commission. The opinion remarks that the report should be completed and filed as expediently as possible, but adds that it is not positively required that it should be filed on or before July 1st. It also states that the life of the commission extends only until such time as it completes its work.

Plans are now being prepared for the new Giannini Hall, $500,000 building given to the University of California by A. P. Giannini and the Bank of Italy for agricultural economics studies. Work on the structure will be started within a short time, an announcement in Berkeley a few days ago stated. The Giannini gift was made for the purpose of studying the problems of the California farmer, both as to production and disposal of crops. The Foundation is to establish a permament institution, only the interest to be expended in the work of the research group to be gathered for the work.

Like waves in an ocean, unending in their advance, millions of young caterpillars marching south from Yreka a few days ago reached the environs of Mt. Shasta and began devouring plants in back yards. They came in droves and sheets, crawling inch by inch south, often swept along in groups of thousands for yards at a time by the winds along the highways and in the fields. In a few days the caterpillars will reach the pupa stage and then become butterflies, their plant and weed destroying ability vanishing with the arrival of wings.

California motorists traveled an average of 8,667 miles during the last year for a grand total of 13,738,693,500 miles, it was reported recently by the state division of highways. Highway mileage was figured on the basis of gasoline consumption, the announcement stating that the American Road Builders' Association classes California as leading the nation in amount of gasoline used. California motor vehicles were said to have used 1,071,681,000 gallons of gasoline during 1927, and New York was listed as second with 892,800,000 gallons.

Carried Snake in Fur

The mystery of a "live" fur that has been carried by a London society woman has been solved. The fur, which was new and of foreign manufacture, seemed bewitched. Whenever the owner laid it down it would change its position with almost imperceptible slowness. Finally she took it to the furriers, who, after some observation, were equally as puzzled. So they opened it and found—a small snake.

Time Has Accorded Paine High Place in American History

The career of Thomas Paine affords an excellent illustration of man's inhumanity to man. Miss Best, in her excellently conceived "Thomas Paine: Prophet and Martyr of Democracy," has put forward an analysis that is both a biography and a defense. Paine, for decades, has suffered under the dark cloud of misrepresentation and foul attack.

The misrepresentation of Paine is mainly due to inspired articles and even biographies, works that were consciously written to belittle the man. Observing his life apart from the detractions of his enemies (as Miss Best does), one notes that he was a hard-working, courageous, public-spirited idealist whose unalterable purpose was the betterment of mankind and whose whole career was marked by an unextinguishable love for his fellow-beings. He landed in America in 1774, a penniless Englishman who had already impressed Benjamin Franklin with his gifts, and from the beginning of the War for Independence he was heart and soul with the Continental forces. His great feat during the Revolution was the pamphlet

Thomas Paine.

"Common Sense," and the various issues of "The Crisis," works in which he combated British propaganda, heartened the Colonists, and offered indestructible arguments for the creation of the United States of America. During a troublous period when the Atlantic seaboard was torn by dissension and doubt he flung "Common Sense" into the mind of the day like a thunderbolt. The arguments in that work spread like wildfire, and it was from these arguments that the republic sprang. Paine convinced hundreds of wavering minds, whipped them into a sturdy attitude, heartened them during the dark days of Valley Forge, and kept always before them the objective of a free republic. After the war, in a letter inviting Paine to visit him, Washington wrote:

"Your presence may remind congress of your past services to this country; and if it is in my power to impress them, command my best services with freedom, as they will be rendered cheerfully by one who entertains a lively sense of the importance of your works, and who, with much pleasure, subscribes himself,

"Your sincere friend,

"G. WASHINGTON."

It was not Washington's habit to subscribe himself anybody's "sincere friend" unless he meant it.—Herbert S. Gorman, in the New York Times.

Declaration Put Out as Patriotic Appeal?

The Declaration of Independence is an immortal piece of political propaganda in a great cause; a skillful piece of publicity work to rally the crowd to support what the determined minority had already, in fact, accomplished.

Discussed on July 1, 2, 3 and 4, it was finally agreed to in secret on the latter day, then printed and sent out on July 5 and 6 to all state governments and army commanders. It was first publicly proclaimed in Trenton, N. J., on the morning of July 9, in City Hall square New York, on July 10, and so on to the proclamation and celebration in Savannah, Ga., on August 10. The next year, 1777, the Fourth of July was celebrated because that is the date at the top of John Dunlap's printed poster as it was reprinted and billboarded throughout all the new states, says the Survey Graphic. However, it is the copy that was ordered July 19, 1776, to be engrossed on parchment, and signed August 2 and later, that is now treasured.

Last Survivor of Boston Tea-Party Rests in Chicago

Seventy-six years ago, February 24, 1852, David Kennison, the last survivor of the Boston tea-party, passed away in Chicago at the age of one hundred and fifteen years. Although he was respected in life as one of America's distinguished heroes and was so honored at his funeral, yet it is the irony of fate that today nobody knows just where the old patriot's bones are resting.

In Chicago's famous recreation ground, Lincoln park, can be found a great granite bowlder bearing a bronze tablet, which commemorates Kennison's chief claim to historic fame.

Originally a son of rock-ribbed New England, writes H. H. Slawson in the Boston Transcript, Kennison had drifted to the prairie country after the Revolution. Later he returned to his native heath to serve in the War of 1812 and then again in 1845 he chose Chicago as the scene of the last seven years of his eventful life.

As old age advanced every effort was made to establish the truth of this white-haired patriarch's assertions that he had participated in the Boston tea-party. Mayor "Long John" Wentworth and a committee of prominent Chicago citizens officially approved his story after the historian, B. J. Lossing, had amply verified it.

Says the Record, after reviewing the facts: "This affidavit, together with other facts, establishes the identity of David Kennison beyond a doubt and no reasonable doubt exists that he was the man of that name who helped to destroy the tea in 1773." So Chicago and the nation accepted him for the venerable hero he was and pilgrims visited the city to see him.

Leaders of Colonists Mostly Well Educated

Twenty-three of the 56 signers of the Declaration of Independence were college-bred men, nearly all of them graduates, according to School Life, a publication of the Department of the Interior, bureau of education. Harvard was represented by 8; William and Mary by 3; Yale, 3; Cambridge (England), 3; Princeton, 2; "Philadelphia," 2; Edinburgh, 1; Jesuit college at Rheims, 1. Sixteen others received "excellent" or "classical" education, one of them at Westminster school, London. Two obtained all their formal instruction from tutors; and 16, including Franklin, Wythe, Roger Sherman and Robert Morris, had but little schooling.

FRANKLIN'S GRAVE

Widening of an adjacent street to protect historic Old Christ church, Philadelphia from the fire menace of encroaching buildings has been urged on the city council. The church burying ground contains the grave of that great inventor, philosopher and statesman, Benjamin Franklin.

Patriot Made Little of Great Services

What is declared to be "the most interesting Fourth of July letter in existence" turned up in New York a few months ago in the immensely valuable Rosenbach collection. It was written in Philadelphia, by Caesar Augustus Rodney, of Delaware, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. In this letter he said:

"I arrived in Congress tho detained by thunder and Rain time enough to give my Voice in the matter of Independence. It is determined by the Thirteen United Colonies without even one desenting Colony. We have now got through with the whole of the Declaration, and ordered it to be printed so that you will soon have the pleasure of seeing it. Hand-bills of it will be printed and sent to the Counties, Cities, County Towns, etc. To be published or rather proclaimed in form."

This is, indeed, a modest recital of the part Rodney is conceded to have played in the adoption of the immortal independence document.—Philadelphia Record.

Those Stop Signs

THE PROPOSAL of erecting arterial stop signs along the length of Main street, Broadway and the Middlefield road in this city has met with considerable opposition, particularly from the police department. It is the contention of Chief of Police Collins that maintaining these three streets as arterial highways would only encourage fast driving on them and increase the danger rather than reduce it. On the other hand those who favor the erection of the signs believe that their erection would reduce the danger of accidents on these busy streets.

There are good arguments on both sides of the question. There is no doubt that the erection of these signs along the highway has resulted in a reduction of traffic trouble on that road. But our personal opinion is that it is better to restrict these signs to the use of main highways only. This, we believe, is also the desire of the State Highway Commission.

The signs were used first on through highways and the stop rule was strictly enforced. When, however, cities throughout the state suddenly bristled forth with stop signs on every corner, the sign lost something of its original significance. Like anything which is overdone, the stop sign is losing its terror to the motorist. We watched one in Burlingame for quite awhile this week, and not one car stopped or even slowed up during that time.

Palo Alto is a city which is oversupplied with these signs. At least five of the Palo Alto streets are signed with stop signs, and driving through that town means stopping and starting from three to five or six times.

We believe that few signs, and a stop rule strictly enforced will do more good than designating many streets and erecting so many signs that it is impossible to enforce the rule at all points. Leave the signs on the highway, but let the motorist show due caution when in town and accidents will be maintained at a low mark.

Lets Talk English

IN ALL AGES, it seems, it has been considered smart to babble in a tongue which others were not supposed to understand. Thousands of years ago the ancient Hebrews tried to express themselves in Hittite; in India, Sanscript formed the vehicle of thought for the intelligencia. Following the conquest of Anglo Saxon England by the Norman conquesors, French became the language of the social aristocracy, and for centuries the laws of an English speaking people were written in French, whereas before they had been written in Latin.

Today we have progressed a little Our laws today are written in a language which all may understand. Doctors no longer use lengthy Latin expressions to designate simple herbs and minerals. But now we seem to be again falling under the influence of a foreign tongue. For behold our advertisements—our bills of fare.

An example: A bill of fare, it is called a menu, lists as follows, Hors d'oeuvres varies, potage Bortsch, Selle D'Agneau de Printemps, Pommes Windsor, Haricots Verts, Laitue Fines Herbes, and so forth. We didn't mind this in France, we expected it. But we have enough pride in the old mother tongue that we hate to see it cast aside for a foreign idiom in our own country.

Then look at the ads. Any ladies' magazine will do. There are parfums of delicat odeur; a dress is chic; it's tres bien; it's vogue. These are advertisements of American made goods, in an American paper, and for an American public. But distant fields are always the greener, and a "parfum of delicat odeur" is more romantic than a mere perfume of delicate odor.

Laws Endanger Liberty

T R. PRESTON, president of the American Bankers' Association, sounds a warning that the entire structure of American democracy is tottering toward disaster because of a desire of legislators to pass laws and create illimitable government bureaus.

"In the 140 years since the American Constitution was written, this government has enacted more laws than all the rest of the civilized world combined since the birth of Christ," he said. "New ones are proposed at the rate of 25,000 a year and about 13 per cent of these get on the statute books. It would take a man working eight hours a day seven years to read all the laws enacted last year. Yet ignorance of the law is no excuse.

"Courts are being so congested with cases that the District Attorney in New York estimates that if every defendant should demand a jury trial, the calendars there would be 500 years behind in four years.

"Americans will go to war and give their life's blood for liberty, then turn around and enact laws depriving themselves of all liberty."

TO CHECK TRAFFIC ON HIGHWAY HERE

Results May Determine Widening of El Camino Real

By LAWRENCE MONFORT
Special to the Times-Gazette

SACRAMENTO, June 28—Widening of existing main trunk highways of the California road system will care for future traffic needs rather than construction of parallel roads serving the same territory, B. B Meek, director of public works declared today in pronouncing a department policy already carried out in improvement of El Camino Real south from San Francisco and which will be extended to the San Joaquin Valley main route between Sacramento and Los Angeles and other primary roads as need arises.

Preparations for the mid-summer traffic count, which will be taken about July 15, now are being made and among the more than 800 selected stations for this work will be several in the vicinity of Redwood City as a means of checking the percentage of gain registered by traffic through that busy town, Meek declared.

The traffic check is the surest means of measuring road width needs, declared the director, who estimates the capacity of a 15-foot roadway as 3000 cars daily; that of a 20-foot roadway as 10,000 cars, and of a 40-foot roadway as 25,000 cars.

The January count this year registered gains of 15 percent over a similar count in 1927 on main north and south routes; 30 percent on recreational routes, said inland points; 28 per cent on inter state connection routes and 51 per cent onrecreational routes, said Meek, who expects the July count to register proportional increases.

Traffic down the main highway south from San Francisco is the second heaviest in the state, according to the January count showed 18,497 cars passing Colma in a day, while the heaviest traffic registered was east of Indiana street, Los Angeles, when 19,469 cars passed during the same period.

Widening of many existing roads is not far distant, Meek and members of the highway commission believe, because of the rapid increase of motor vehicle traffic. The presest registration in the state in excess of 1,700,000 and probably will reach the 2,000,000 mark this year.

The present budget, $49,000,000 for the biennium is dedicated to new construction of road included in the highway program, and little road widening is to be done this year or next, so far as major highways are concerned, with the exception of the Pacific highway, which is being improved in Shasta county this year.

The present program includes 150 major projects not counting bridges or grade separations, which will cost from $50,000 to more than $800,000 and 300 minor projects with costs ranging from $10,000 to $50,000. The program is on schedule to date in Northern California but slightly behind time in the south owing to the limited powers of the engineering forces at Meek's disposal.

The Carmel-San Simeon road, now under way with convict labor, eventually is expected to link up with a shore-line boulevard between San Francisco and Los Angeles, and the $980,000 task soon to be undertaken by the highway division of building a 25-mile highway between Oxnard and Santa Monica will be a part of this system.

California's cars now are speeding over 6789 miles of state highways of which 4220 are improved.

FARMERS OPPOSE STATE TRADE MARK

Too Much Government Is Feared by Farmers

By ESTO BROUGHTON

SACRAMENTO, June 28—All is not fair sailing for the state "Trade Mark" plan backed by the Sacramento Region Citizens Council as a panacea for the farmer, according to Ralph Taylor, secretary of the Agricultural Legislative Committee.

According to Taylor, a storm of opposition is gathering against the plan to use the state seal as a trade mark guaranteeing quality of fruits and other products of California's soil.

"The farmers are up in arms at the idea of the creation of a new state commission, a commerce department for agriculture separate from the present state department of agriculture," Taylor declared, and as representatives of over half of the farmers in the state, he believes he is in a position to know what they want.

"Too much government is feared as much by farmers as by business men," said Taylor, "and farmers are afraid of too much governmental interference in the marketing of their produce. The paternalism of such a governmental agency might easily become despotic in the opinion of the agriculturalists. At any rate, they think it is unsafe and economically unsound to carry out the extensive governmental advertising campaign outlined as part of the 'Trade Mark' program."

A flood of individual objections has been pouring into headquarters of the Agriculatural Legislative Committee composed of representatives of 70,000 to 136,000 farms in California, and as a result official action will be taken on the policy of having any state trade mark at the next executive meeting, scheduled for July, Taylor announced.

"These farmers, producing crops with a sales value of $200,000,000 early have everything at stake in the marketing of their crops," Taylor asserted. "They cannot afford to play with theories and fancies. They must know that a sales program will work.

"On the other hand, California farmers realize the value of good quality in selling. In 1925 they backed a law requiring honest labeling of quality of contents of canned goods, and this law might be enlarged and strengthened. But the 'Trade Mark' is quite a different thing, it is a state label on all goods, the state seal as it were."

Fear that the trade mark might prove a boomerang is felt by farmers experienced in marketing, Taylor declared.

Atherton Books To Be Audited Soon

The accounts of the town of Atherton will soon be given their annual audit. City Clerk Jennings reported at the meeting of the council Tuesday evening that the firm of Dolge & Co., who had done the auditing in the past had dissolved partnership, and that George H. Satchell, one of the partners and the one who had done the work on the Atherton books before was now in business for himself.

City Attorney Arthur H. Reddington was instructed to take the matter up with Sachell and find out what he would charge for auditing the books and to report to Councilman Donohoe. Donohoe was empowered to have the audit made if he thought the price reasonable.

The greatest "Hook-up" of all

You sit down of an evening before "the best set in the world." You turn a switch, a dial and—marvelous!—you're getting a program from one of the local stations. You swing out a bit and you get a station five hundred miles away. Another turn of the dial and music "comes in" over perhaps thousands of miles.

But do you realize the vast scope of the hook-up that selects for you any one of the 18,500,000 telephones in the United States?

You place a local call and in a moment you are talking across the city. Another, and you talk across the continent. Swing out a bit and many points in Europe, Canada and Mexico are within instant reach of your voice.

Yes, it's the greatest hook-up of all. The creation of over half a century of concentrated research and development for the upbuilding of the world's greatest communication service—a service that is personal, that is fast, dependable and economical.

Woodside

Those of us whose memory runs back thirty years or more can recall the popularity of the old game of tug-of-war. The chief event at every picnic was the tug-of-war, in dustrial concerns organized their employees into tug-of-war teams and contested with each other and professional teams toured the country giving exhibitions of their strength and staying power. A relic of those days has been presented to the Woodside school by A. Hubeli. It is a complete apparatus for the game as formerly conducted and when installed in the school yard should afford some healthful exercise for the youngsters.

Dr. and Mrs. Bradford Leavitt with their niece, Miss Margery Smith, and their grand-daughter, Grace Helen Eaves, arrived from Pasadena on Wednesday. They will be here for the summer although a little later in the season, Dr. Leavitt will make the trip to Honolulu.

The Bear Gulch Water Company is improving its service along the Kings Mountain Road by installing a four inch main in place of the two inch line that has had to furnish the water required. This will make possible some additional fire hydrants in this section of the valley.

The sewing circle of the Parent-Teacher Association met at the club rooms on Wednesday to organize the work in preparation for the bazaar to be held this fall.

Mrs. Jos. L. Ross, Jr., with her mother, Mrs. Henry Martins, and her sister, Mrs. Caswell Swett, paid a visit to Mt. Hermon on Wednesday.

Rev. Benjamin St. John will spend his vacation this year with his brother, Aaron St. John in Colorado.

The many friends of Kenneth McIntosh were saddened to hear of his fatal accident last week. Altough he had not lived here for several years past, a large part of his boyhood had been spent in Woodside.

Albion avenue is closed to traffic being under reconstruction at the hands of the road department. We accept the detour that this necessitates in a very cheerful spirit. The prospect of a good roadbed on that thoroughfare dulls any sense of present inconvenience. Another improvement being made by the road department is the widening of the road and practical elimination of the curve at the point where the Canyada Road enters the highway. This has hitherto been a blind spot fraught with danger and several collisions have occurred at that point.

Mrs. Henry MacArthur of Palo Alto entertained a large number of her friends with a barbecue dinner at her log cabin home here last week.

A number of children's parties have been given and are planned for the children summering in Woodside. One of these was given last week for Miss Leone Weeks and another for Peter Avenali.

Bailey Lang of 259 Lincoln avenue was taken to the Shriners' Childrens hospital in San Francisco this week and is reported to be in a serious condition at that institution.

Members of the Redwood City Exchange Club were given a graphic account of the recent Republican convention at Kansas City by Rev. Bryant Preston of Palo Alto, who as a newspaper correspondent, represented many papers of the northwest at the meeting. Rev. Preston has been in attendance at political conventions for many years as a newspaper correspondent and enhanced his remarks on the recent convention by a background of historical reminiscences. Rev. Preston is a speaker of unusual ability and his address was one which proved of great interest to all present.

James Eva, physical education instructor of Sequoia high school, was the chairman of the evening.

Woman Faces Charge Of Reckless Driving

Mrs. G. E. Hall of Burlingame is now at liberty on $200 bail and faces a charge of reckless driving, preferred by Harry Bunyard. Bunyard alleges that on Sunday, while driving north on the highway at San Mateo his car was overtaken by one driven by Mrs. Hall. After sideswiping Bunyard's car, the driver of the other machine swerved into a telegraph pole which was broken off by the impact and then landed against a flagpole in front of a service station.

During the confusion which followed the driver of the car and her male companion disappeared. Bunyard swore out a warrant of arrest on the rickless driving charge and for three days police of an Mateo and Burlingame were looking for the woman whose address was unknown. On Wednesday she appeared at the San Mateo police station and gave herself up.

Iced Desserts Solve Summer Meal Problem

Lagging appetites in warm weather may be stimulated by the serving of ice drinks and light frozen desserts and the sprinkling of chipped ice over the relishes.

"Home-made ices and icecream are always a delight, and it is not difficult, as many housewives believe to make them. Following are a few recipes for delicious ices that will meet the approval of the entire family. In freezing it is safe to use four parts ice to one part coarse salt."

Lemon Ice

1 quart water, 2 cups sugar, 3-4 cup lemon juice. Make a syrup by adding sugar to the boiling water; boil three minutes, cool, add lemon juice, strain and freeze.

Orange Ice

1 quart water, 2 cups sugar, 2 cups orange juice, 1-4 cup lemon juice, granted rind of 2 oranges. Make syrup as for lemon ice; add fruit juice and granted rind; cool, strain and freeze.

Raspberry Ice

1 quart water, 1 2-3 cups sugar, 2 cups raspberry juice, 2 tablespoons lemon juice. Make syrup as for lemon ice; cool, add raspberry and lemon juice, strain and freeze.

Strawberry Ice

1 quart water, 2 2-2 cups sugar, 2 cups strawberry juice, 1 tablespoon lemon juice.

Prepare and freeze same as raspberry ice. Juice is obtained from berries by crushing and heating slightly.

Facts About the Telephone

There are now 18 telephones for every hundred persons residing in the state of Connecticut.

The average number of local and toll telephone calls in the state of Texas over the Bell System wires is now more than 4,500,000 per day.

In the seven years between 1920 and 1927 there was an increase of 22,033,000 telephone calls per day over the wires of the Bell System.

The plant investment for the Bell System totaled, at the beginning of the present year, $3,018,985,126, or $220.82 per single telephone.

Enough telephone wire to girdle the earth ten times will be added to the Bell telephone plant in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec in Canada during 1928.

Less than one per cent of the telephone calls made in Chicago result in wrong numbers, according to a check made by the Department of Public Service of Illinois.

Of the 20,300 persons employed by the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania, approximately 10,000 are in the Traffic Department and of these, close to 95% are women operators.

Aged Indigent Found Dead in Deep Ravine

The body of Louis Anderson, 65, an inmate of the San Mateo County poor farm, who had been missing since May 30, was found Tuesday in a deep ravine of the mountains not far from the junction of the Skyline boulevard and the Halfmoon Bay road. It is believed that Anderson left the poor farm and became bewildered and wandered into the deep canyon, where he died of natural causes. No marks of violence were found on the body by Coroner McGovern. An inquest was held in Halfmoon Bay.

How to Make Your Brakes Increase Your Tire Mileage

"Take a rubber ball and roll it down the road. Look at it. You probably won't find a mark on it. Now hold it in your hand and scrape it along the road. Look at the scratches and cuts in the ball—it wouldn't take many scrapes to wear the ball through," says Louis Lodi of Brown's Tire Shop, the local Federal Agent in Redwood City.

"So it is with your tires," continues Mr. Lodi. "They will roll over the road for thousands of miles. But every time you put on your brakes and slide the wheels you are scraping many miles of wear off your tires.

"You can't get full mileage out of your tires with grabbing brakes or brakes improperly adjusted.

"Properly adjusted brakes take hold evenly all around—give each tire an equal share in the braking effort. Properly adjusted brakes will not slide the wheels no matter how hard they may be applied—and brakes adjusted so that just won't slide the wheels will stop you car quicker than brakes that do slide the wheels.

"If every motorist would have his brake adjustment checked at least once a month, he would be paid big dividends in increased tire mileage."

Enters Race For State Senate Place

George C. Cleveland of Watsonville, four times assemblyman from Santa Cruz county, and prominent farmer and fruit grower, is a candidate for state senator on the Republican ticket and will oppose Senator M. B. Johnson, incumbent.

Cleveland was educated in the schools of California and at Stanford university, and was admitted to the bar in 1895. He served in the assembly in 1905, 1921, 1923 and 1925 and has never been defeated for office. He is an overseas veteran, having served in the Philippines in the Spanish-American war in 1898, and in France in the World war. Rejected by army examiners in this country, he went to Canada and enlisted there, returning home after the armistice with an enviable record. In the assembly Cleveland was particularly interested in agriculture, and in economy and efficiency in every branch of the government.

Advertising Plan Fails To Secure Board's Sanction

Letters of protest in regard to the request of a San Francisco newspaper for $1400 for an advertisement of this county in an edition to be published soon, resulted Monday in the refusal of the board of supervisors to sanction the plan. The matter was considered at a previous meeting of the board, and at that time it was decided to lay the matter over for some time in order that the board might have the advise of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce.

At the meeting Monday, Secretary Wyatt of the latter organization was present and in addition to speaking against the plan himself, he read letters of protest from E. B. Hinman, president of the Redwood City Chamber of Commerce and from Leonard Reed, secretary of the Burlingame Chamber of Commerce.

Wyatt stated that because of the limited sum available for advertising purposes he though it better to expend that amount in smaller amounts in various places than to expend $1400 for one scheme.

Atherton Council Awards Contract For Street Work

A contract was awarded to C. L. Jordan Tuesday evening by the Alerton Town Council for paving several streets in Atherton. The streets to be improved are Fairview avenue, North Gate, Middle Gate, South Gate and Park Drive. Jordan's bid for the paving was $9,402.30.

Four other bids were received by the city council. The other bidders were Peninsula Paving Co., $10,107; O. G. Richie, $10,281.70; E. M. Dearborn, $11,580.60 and W. A. Dontonville, $10,112.55.

Jordan was present and assured the board that he was ready to begin the work immediately.

Earl Wilsey, representing the city engineer, George Kneese, reported to the board that a contract which had been awarded to C. Lindgren had been assigned by the latter to E. M. Dearborn. Lindgren's sureties, Wilsey stated, had assented to the assignment. Dearborn upon being asked by the board when he could begin the work reported that he could start within a week and could complete the contract within forty days.

REDWOOD Y. M. I. LOOSES GAME HERE

Large Crowd Witnesses Fourteen Hard Fought Innings Sunday

By JOHN RYAN

Manager Al Bullivant and his Young Men's Institute ball tossers were in a very generous mood last Sunday on the Sequoia diamond, so generous in fact they presented the Halfmoon Bay Y. M. I. with the winners slice of a perfectly good game of baseball.

A large crowd of fans witnessed fourteen hard fought innings before the big artichoke men began to hammer the apple, which, coupled with Allain's error gave them a three to one victory.

Three times Redwood loaded the bases with no outs but just as often, Cunha, visiting pitcher, checked the Redwood batsman.

"Tick" Hallett, local slab artist, whiffed seventeen and issued but two bases on balls. Cunha, for the bay team, fanned sixteen and issued three passes.

The Redwood men touched Cunha for 12 hits, but unfortunately they were scattered, while Halfmoon gathered but 5 hits from Hallett, but managed to get two of them in the fatal fourteenth and scored two winning runs therefrom.

By winning Sunday's game, Halfmoon Bay gains first clutch on the Holland and Molkenbuhr trophy, for which a three game series is to be played between the two teams. Te next game takes place a week from Sunday at Halfmoon Bay.

Nature's Creed

The Modernists with their clever twists
Are reconstructing God,
Yet God is here when the sun is clear
And the d is on the sod.
The pulpit nd with the stubborn pound
Of the mentalists,
And yet in spite of the petty fight
God's majesty persists.

Beyond the ken of the minds of men
Is the power of sun and clod
That moves the corn blades in the morn —
The farmer calls it God.
So this is wrought it matters not
If factions never meet,
For the God of his salvation is
The God of corn and wheat!

God's in the rain and the yellow grain
And in the fruited soil;
The country's grace reveals His face
To all who sing and toil.
When birds rejoice we hear His voice
Whatever be our creed;
We know that God renews the sod
And stirs the planted seed.

TUBERCULOSIS AND CLIMATE

By LeRoy S. Peters, M. D., Albuquerque, N. M.

Almost before the time of civilized man some sage said "If you would get well of tuberculosis, go into the mountains and live on the fruit of the cow." Many centuries went by and that doctrine was law. Then came the anti-climate era when everybody was to be cured by his own fireside.

Climate spelled nothing, the physicians who lived in unfavorable climates heaped abuse upon the ones who lived in the favorable zones. They in turn retaliated and a climate war resulted. After the smoke of battle had cleared to some extent a proper evaluation was possible.

Some tuberculosis can be cured in the worst of climates; all tuberculosis cannot be cured in the best of climates and still people get well everywhere.

Early tuberculosis can with safety be given the benefit of home climate treatment, for under proper conditions and skilled medical care early disease becomes arrested with little hardship anywhere. The more advanced cases can be tried out at home, but if no improvement is shown in a reasonable length of time they they should be given the added advantage of climate, provided all things are equal. And thereby hangs a tale.

There are essentials much more important than climate in the treatment of tuberculosis. They are rest, good food, and careful supervision. These are essential in any climate, and without them the average case is doomed. Now, if in addition we can add climate, we have given the patient a ten percent better chance which, in a chronic disease, such as tuberculosis, is a percentage not to be despised.

When all is said climate still remains a luxury. It is far better to be well cared for in the worst climate on earth than poorly cared for in the best. When one can afford to add climate to rest, good food, and careful supervision, one has the best possible combination in the treatment of tuberculosis, but unless one can afford this, by all means stay with the essentials.

Y. M. I. HOLDS FIRST DISTRICT INITIATION

Drill Teams From Many Bay District Institutes Attended Ceremonies

Redwood Council No. 66, Young Men's Institute, acted as host to members of the Young Men's and Ladies' Institutes from San Francisco and the bay cities in their first district initiation held here last Sunday.

The festivities of the day started with the arrival of a special train in the morning, bringing a large delegation from San Francisco. Immediately following the arrival of the special train the parade formed and marched thru the business district to the convent grounds, where an open air mass was celebrated. The line of march displayed a brilliant array of well drilled, uniformed teams from various councils in the bay district. California Institute Y. L. I. won first place in the ladies competition with McGinnon Institute second—both from San Francisco.

In the Y. M. I. competition, Pioneer Council No. 1 took first place and Golden Gate, second.

The drill team from San Jose Y. L. I. and the drum corps from San Bruno were well received by spectators along the line of March.

The four cups going to the winners were donated by M. Howard, James J. McGrath, J. P. Hearne and Redwood Council Y. M. I. Judges were J. W. Morey, Menlo Park; A. M. Donnelly and J. P. Hearne, Redwood City.

After luncheon, initiation took place in the lodge rooms of the Foresters' Hall, while a very successful dance was held in the ball room downstairs. "Sonny" Havey and his six-piece orchestra furnished music for the dance, which was enjoyed by a large crowd. The cups were awarded during the dance and several singers from San Francisco entertained during the intermissions. As a final feature of the day the baseball team of Redwood Council lost to the Halfmoon Bay Council nine in a thrilling fourteen inning game on the Sequoia diamond. A large crowd was on hand to view the game.

VETERANS TO RECEIVE HOME BUYING AID

Total Investment in San Mateo County Totals $466,400

By CLEM WHITAKER
Staff Correspondent

SACRAMENTO, June 28— Armistice Day is approaching for those war veterans of Redwood City who have applied for state aid in purchase of homes, George M. Stout, secretary of the Veterans Welfare Board announced today. Favorable action on application by San Mateo County's ex-soldiers can be expected within six months of the applications comply with the law's requirements, Stout said.

With four-fifths of purchases complete, the veterans home loan program is drawing to a close. Property purchases throughout the state now total $23,519,594.84 as compared with the $30,000,000 in bonds voted by the people in two bond issues.

Five percent interest is charged the ex-service men who secure home loans the loan extending over a period of 20 years, and the payments on a house average about $33 per month, inclusive of interest. Cost of veterans farms average $5422, according to Stout, while the average cost of homes is $4692.

The total investment authorized by the board in San Mateo county now totals $466,400, all of which has been spent for homes for 97 veterans.

There were 20 men wounded or disabled among those who have been granted home loans in San Mateo county, Stout pointed out, in the state at large, 4,727 homes and 247 farms have been purchased.

"We will care for hundreds of men on our waiting list during the next half-year," said Stout, "and during the period expect to spend about $6,500,000 of the unexpended bond issue."

Mrs. Martin of San Francisco has returned to her home after a visit to her sister, Mrs. David Beebe of Pine street.

The Colfax Bookplate

By AGNES MILLER

© by The Century Co.

SYNOPSIS

On a certain Monday morning Miss Constance Fuller, seller of rare books at Darrow's Bookshop, New York, notices that the first customer is a dignified old gentleman, who saunters into the alcove placarded "Medical Works." Peter Burton, one of the employees, amazes Constance by telling her he paid $510 at auction for an old law book containing a Colfax bookplate. Suddenly a girl's shriek of "Murder!" rings out. The elderly customer is on the floor unconscious, with his right wrist slashed. Just before the shrieking girl falls in a faint, she calls out to Peter: "Keep it! Keep it for me!" Peter's sister, Nancy, began that morning working at Darrow's. Nancy tells Constance of her elopement with Brandon Tower, an elopement which was cut short when Tower attempted to make off with Nancy's suitcase. Constance explains Darrow's card-index system to Captain Ashland, a nephew of Mr. Darrow's. They examine the book Peter paid $510 for and find the bookplate to be a forgery. Constance is asked to assist Detective Almy in his investigation of the murder of the elderly gentleman. The girl who fainted, Julia Grosvenor, turns out to be his granddaughter. She can throw no light on the mystery. Constance removes the bookplate from the old law book and discovers a small key secreted in a hollow on the cover. She makes other discoveries, too.

"That's good," said he. "By the way, Mr. Darrow went up to his Westchester place last night for the week-end, instead of tonight, as usual, and won't be here until Monday. He's entertaining Captain Ashland. So have no fears that you'll be checked up in the middle of the catalogue."

So the head of the house was gone; and Captain Ashland, excellent creature, was gone; and Peter, fundamentally sound and always set to go off, despite his imperfect nature, was gone. Were there no righteous men left? Where was Mr. Roberts?

I was to learn. Just as Mr. Case breathed his glad tidings into my ear, Miss Wilkes entered.

"You look dreadfully tired, dear," she remarked, stopping at my desk, though I was sure I was not the attraction. "What a shame you have such a rush with the catalogue! Outrageous, I call it, for printers to think of striking. I wonder what workingmen are coming to, sometimes, don't you, Mr. Case? Gracious, you look dreadfully tired, yourself!"

"Sometimes I wonder what we're all coming to," responded Mr. Case, with plaintive restraint.

"That really puts it much better! . . . By the way, how did little Miss Burton get along last evening, Miss Fuller? I was sorry I was unable to send you one of my more experienced girls."

"I couldn't have wanted anyone better," said I.

"I am glad to hear she filled in acceptably in the emergency," declared Miss Wilkes, very crossly, "because I must speak to Mr. Roberts about her today. Tomorrow her first week will be up, and to me she hardly seems to be the material one makes a stenographer out of."

"I agree with you," said I; "she'll go much further."

Mr. Case rushed courageously between the flashing rapiers.

"I don't know whether Mr. Roberts will be here today. He's off somewhere on business for Mr. Darrow who's in the country."

I was stunned, but worse was to come, and at once.

"Oh, Mr. Case," said Miss Wilkes, "what about my cousin, Magistrate Judder, getting that book?"

"I beg pardon?" murmured Mr. Case, not unnaturally bewildered.

And there was the book right on the desk! There was one way to save the situation—by foolhardiness. Before any explanation could be begun, I bounded to my feet and hurled myself on two young damsels who were entering the shop truculently, at a critical hour, five minutes of nine. On their feet were black satin strap pumps with rhinestone side-buckles; from their coats peeped forth the school middy; each bore in one hand a brief-case, but in the other a brown paper parcel all pinned up. It was Friday. Truculence equaled shyness, slippers plus Friday equaled dance, brown paper minus pins equaled party frocks. I swiftly steered the pair down the aisle to the table where etiquette books were on display. While they were selecting one I observed my desk, Miss Wilkes and Mr. Case.

They talked until the girl friends had hastened on to school to cram for the dance. Then Miss Wilkes vanished upward, still talking; Mr. Case disappeared toward his office; and I thrust that jinx of a book back into the lowest left-hand drawer of the desk, with both haste and reluctance. But I could not well ask to have the safe opened in Mr. Roberts' absence without arousing curiosity.

Several sections of the catalogue had been nicely pinned, unpinned, pasted and pulled apart again, when Mr. Case walked calmly up the aisle.

"May I see that Clarthew for a minute, please?" he asked.

"Certainly," said I, "right away, as soon as I paste this page. I can't let go of it, you see. The book's in my desk, and I'll bring it to you directly. If you don't want to wait."

It was a safe bet that no man alive would want to wait for anything. When Mr. Case had gone, with shaking hands I grabbed my paste-brush and stuck the bookplate on lightly over the key, pressing it down until it presented exactly its original appearance. Then I took it to Mr. Case, and told him I still had to write the notices for book and plate as Mr. Darrow had ordered. He said he would return the book in plenty of time for that.

Back at my desk in a perfectly distracted condition, I was not reassured by feeling a rhythmical swaying in the atmosphere, and perceiving Miss Wilkes bearing down on me.

"I'd never have interrupted, dear, if I'd known you were still doing that catalogue!" she cooed. "Mercy, it does take you a long time, doesn't it?

. . . Well, if you insist. Yes, dear, you can help me. Such trouble as I am in! You see, my cousin Magistrate Judder—you've heard of him, of course?"

"Oh, yes!" I had. Nancy had brought him to my attention for the first time the previous afternoon.

"Well, he saw that a certain old law book—Clarihew's 'Notes,' I think they call it—was bought for us in Richmond last week. You know it, do you? Well, he wants to buy it, right away, and without fail. This morning he sent me this check for two hundred dollars—" she produced one drawn on a perfectly good bank, and signed Wilmer Ponsonby Judder—"so I might get it for him at once."

"No price has been set on it yet," I remarked. "You'll have to ask Mr. Case about it."

"Why, I did, dear. But Mr. Case says he has no orders from Mr. Darrow, and Mr. Darrow won't be here until Monday, so what am I to do?"

"I don't see that anything's your fault," said I, profoundly weary. "Anyhow, Mr. Darrow's last orders are that the book is to be advertised in this catalogue. Too bad, but your cousin will just have to take his chance with other customers."

"But you see," pursued Miss Wilkes, "I gave him my word Wednesday that I would try to see about the book next day. I sent down an inquiry about it to Mr. Case by that troublesome rattlepated little Miss Burton yesterday afternoon, and this morning she tells be she overlooked giving the message. I am most dreadfully put out by her stupidity, for if she had delivered the message, Mr. Case could easily have asked Mr. Darrow to fix the price, and I am sure two hundred would have put a reserve on it, anyway."

Gracious powers! Mr. Darrow would have wept hot salt tears on the learned neck of Magistrate Judder for far less than that sum!

I had no time to gape again at Nancy's curious conduct, for Miss Wilkes added plaintively:

"And so I'm in a quandary! My cousin Magistrate Judder is entertaining Congressman Sturgis in his home here over this week-end! Now, what do you suppose would be just the thing to do for him?"

"Stock exchange . . . Fifth avenue . . . Grant's tomb . . . Peacock alley . . . Follies . . . supper in Chinatown," I hazarded, but Miss Wilkes gasped as if I had laid down my hand on the Ark.

"My dear Miss Fuller! You don't know who Congressman Sturgis is! He is a Sturgis of Sturgis in Sturgis county—"

"Virginia!" I shrieked in desperation, hitting my faithful desk an uncalled-for whack. "For Pete's sake! Don't tell me!" Miss Wilkes looked considerably astonished, and I didn't blame her, for the effect on my nerves of learning that another representative from the Mother of Presidents was trailing that lawbook must have been a sight to see. I apologized. "I see I'm right. I just have indigestion. Do go on, Miss Wilkes; I love politics."

"So does my cousin Magistrate Judder," simpered Miss Wilkes. "Here's the secret, dear. He's running for congress, you know, in the One Hundred and Forty-Ninth district. Election's coming, and the One Hundred and Forty-Ninth district is always uncertain and the national committee of my cousin Magistrate Judder's party is taking special pains to win it this time. Of course you don't know it, but Congressman Sturgis has great influence on this committee. And the curious thing is, he is the great-great-nephew of the Clarihew who wrote the 'Notes.' Now, you know how much Southerners think of family—"

"I do," I observed. "And so your cousin Magistrate Judder believes that this unique family memento should be restored to Congressman Sturgis after generations of absence?"

"How well you put it, dear! Now do you see how you can help me? I will be personally absolutely responsible for that book if you will let me take it over the week-end. I'll deposit the check here as a guarantee of good faith, and bring the book back without fail Monday. I will explain all the circumstances to my cousin Magistrate Judder, and he will handle the matter suitably. Perhaps it might even be more delicate to present the book after Mr. Sturgis had shown his emotions on seeing it. I know my cousin will buy it at the first possible instant."

"But—"

"And I, Miss Fuller, would be infinitely indebted to you. My cousin Magistrate Judder and I have all our lives been like brother and sister. His wife and I have been as one sister with another. I wish to see them prosper, with all my heart. They expect to entertain lavishly in Washington next winter, and I may confide to you, Miss Fuller, that it is my ambition to get a connection in Washington; life there is so pleasant. I should be glad to return this favor to you some time in a useful way."

Having from childhood had an intense interest in fossil vertebrates, I have always thought it would be rather pleasant to be a curator of such objects in the National museum, especially if I could do some intriguing on the side with a handsome young Arvenian diplomat every afternoon at a tea-dance. But my sense of duty was such that I passed up the chance without a quiver, firmly convinced that this new Virginian must be a further sort of Caucasian in the woodpile. "Miss Wilkes," I said more firmly than sweetly, "what authority have I to give you that book?"

"Why, I'm a responsible, confidential executive here!" boomed the affronted Miss Wilkes. "Mr. Darrow would let me have it in a minute!"

I knew that only too well. I said: "But he's not here."

"You refuse to entrust it temporarily to me, to show a prospective customer who has made a heavy deposit as evidence of good faith?"

"Right," said I, succinctly.

"Miss Fuller, this is nothing but spite of long standing; nothing but your everlasting conceit!"

She was gone, mortally offended, as the climax to a record morning. Had I, after all, lost a good sale? How would I explain . . . anything . . . to Mr. Darrow? I certainly had not finished the catalogue. And for what purpose had I lent the Clarihew to Mr. Case, who still had it?

The next number on the program was to arrange with the printer for a necessary delay in delivering the copy: a fiery ordeal, for Mr. Gregory had been in the business fifty-four years out of his total of sixty-eight, and seemed to think he knew something about it. After he had said six or seven times that the catalogue couldn't be printed at all unless the copy was ready by noon; and I had countered with the statement that three o'clock was the first minute he could expect it; we agreed on two o'clock. As I rang off, Mr. Dibdin brought me the law book, with which, he said, Mr Case had finished.

The bookplate was exactly as I had placed it. I took it off again in trepidation. The key was in its hiding place. I locked book, bookplate, and key again in the drawer of the desk just as the clock struck twelve. Luncheon would again be sandwiches and coffee for me.

So I seized the chance to work without interruption for the first time that day, and at last, as the hands of the clock reached two, and Mr. Gregory's boy arrived to sit on a stool and inspect me disparagingly while I put on the final touches, I finished the catalogue copy. Clarihew's "Notes on Medical Statutes in the Virginia Code" was described as one of very few known copies, in excellent condition, some leaves uncut, of rare interest to collectors of Virginiana; and, after my nocturnal researches, I had even thought of something to say about the bookplate. "Clever counterfeit of unidentified Colfax plate, presumed lost," announced the notice. "Shows interior of surgery of early Nineteenth century, featuring interesting scientific instruments; charming seascape in background. Nameless; no date. Unique."

The catalogue had gone in the arms of the boy, and I felt as if my luck was beginning to turn at last, when this feeling was confirmed by the sight of Mr. Roberts approaching on the sidewalk. I snatched the keys out of my purse in the front drawer of the desk, unlocked the lowest left-hand drawer, opened it, and slipped my hand under some papers to take out the law book. Suddenly my heart stood still. I threw the papers on the floor, looked, looked again. Then I fell back in my chair, and gasped frantically as Mr. Roberts flung the door open:

"It's gone!"

"What's gone "

"Clarihew's 'Notes'! Good Heavens, what shall we do?"

Mr. Roberts demanded an explanation. I stared mutely in desperation at the floor, and wondered if I could really wait until five o'clock to have hysterics in decent privacy. Then I found myself in his office. I poured out my soul about Miss Wilkes, for it was she who I felt sure first had taken the book.

"How did she know where it was? How did she get your keys and unlock the drawer?" demanded Mr. Roberts, dashing my theory to pieces on the rocks of good sense.

"Well, how did anybody?" I retorted.

But he said she wasn't smart enough, at least, whoever had been, and I felt a shade better, especially when he laughed about Magistrate Judder, and said he had heard of his political ambitions.

"Still, Mr. Roberts," I insisted, "there's another reason why she might want it—why everybody that's been trying for that book might want it! I sat up all night finding it out!"

"All night! What did you find?"

"You remember that counterfeit bookplate?" I began. He nodded. "Well, in accordance with Mr. Darrow's orders, I removed it; and beneath it, Mr. Roberts, sunk into the cover of the book, I discovered a tiny, old-fashioned key!"

"A key! In the cover! Let's see it."

"It's gone, with the book. And I found something else. On Tuesday morning I was working in the history alcove; I found this paper there. It fell out of a book that was on a shelf."

I produced the yellow slip. Mr. Roberts frowned in amazement to recognize his own message returned to him thus strangely, and so battered.

"I had thrown that into the waste-basket Monday morning," I continued. "Professor Harrington had picked it out to write on it a list of books he wanted; it's still on the back. I was naturally quite surprised to come across it again as I have described. So I stuck it into my pocket. I have been so busy that I didn't think of it again until last night, when my attention was called to it while I was removing the bookplate."

"In what way?"

Matter of Invention Subject to Dispute

Among all the inventors of whom popular history tells, only three, Archimedes, Ericsson and Edison, have been credited with more than one important invention. Others may have equaled them in genius, but not in luck. So, leaving aside these three "great inventors," let us take up the "inventors" who did everything else, and later the question of who were really great inventors.

Who invented the telegraph? Any American who has been through the eighth grade knows that it was Morse and Vail, in 1844. But there was an English commercial line seven years earlier, and the German credit the telegraph to Sommering, of Munich, in 1809, and in Switzerland there was an electric telegraph in 1774, and one was proposed in Scotland in 1753.

The matter becomes rather confusing for the eighth grade. Who invented the friction match? There are so many claimants that we don't know who invented it.

Who devised the anerold barometer? In Paris in 1848 two men, Vidi and Bourdon, each claimed it, with apparent sincerity, and different courts decided for each of them. But 152 years earlier the philosopher, Leibniz, had suggested such a barometer, describing it exactly.—Scientific Monthly.

Chinese Society

The English translation of Kuomingtang, mentioned so frequently as operating in China, is as follows: Kuo means country, min means people and tang or tong means association. The whole word is interpreted: Association to bring the country into the hands of the people. The association is half patriotic, half political.

A Clean Mug

Agnes, five years old, a little one told about in "Children," had been called from play to breakfast. When her mother told her to wash her face and hands, she replied, "All right, mamma, I'll wash my hands, but I've washed my face once and I haven't used it since."

All Right

Starter—Here! Here! Your foot is past the starting line.

Runner—No, it isn't. It's just even. My shoe's too big.

It All Depended

"What is that new structure you have put up on the hill there?" asked a curious visitor of a farmer.

"Well," replied the farmer, "if I find a tenant for it, it's a bungalow; if I don't, it's a barn!"

HOW FISH GROW

Fisherman—"Fish grow in a miraculous way in this region." Friend—"I can scarcely believe that." Fisherman—"Well, just get one of these anglers to tell you more than once about some fish he's caught."

Self-Condemned

District Attorney—What possible excuse did you fellows have for acquitting the murderer?

Juryman—Insanity

District Attorney—What! the whole twelve of you?

Popular Acclaim

"My boy Josh stands higher than his teachers right now," said Farmer Corntossel.

"How do you know?"

"When he plays football all the faculty applauds. Nobody says 'rah! rah!' at a college lecture."

Harold—Yes, I'm going in for physical education.

Doris—Did you fail in the others?

Yanks Can't Win Without Luck

"I know the Yanks have got the best ball club in the country, but that doesn't mean it is any cinch we are going to win." And that, fellow fans, is what the game's biggest figure, Babe Ruth, thinks about the impending American league pennant race.

The Babe bares his innermost thoughts about baseball generally, baseball fans, baseball luck and, specifically, the Yanks' chances during the coming season in an interview with Bozeman Bulger, the veteran sports writer, published in The Farm Journal.

Babe Ruth.

"The trouble with baseball fans," observes Mr. Ruth, "is that they get so steamed up over an easy win that they forget that 50 per cent of baseball is luck. If something goes wrong the next year they start right off talking about internal dissension, and this and that player being hard to get along with, and so on. They never figure that the luck simply broke the other way."

There have been a lot of great ball clubs that have pulled up in the ruck of a major league race, far behind inferior teams, simply because they didn't get that 50 per cent break of luck, if you want Mr. Ruth's opinion.

"To cop the old flag," says the $70,000 beauty quaintly, "a ball club has not only got to be the best, but it's got to get the breaks at the right time, too.

"Did you ever think what might have happened to us last season if we hadn't got off to that runaway start and then had another long winning streak soon afterward? Just throw out those two streaks, or balance them up with average luck, and see where we would have been. Now it doesn't figure out that we are going to have such a streak again, even with the same ball players.

"I know the Yanks have got the best ball club in the country, but suppose somebody breaks a leg or one of our best pitchers goes wrong. What then?"

Incidentally, Bulger's Farm Journal article throws an interesting light on Ruth's determination to make himself better—and positively not bigger—during the season, a characteristic that has grown year by year since his comeback of three years ago.

Half-Mile Record Held by Six Different Men

In view of Lloyd Hahn's record it is interesting to note that only five men before him have held the acknowledged world's half-mile record since 1885.

The great Lon Meyers set a world's mark of 1 minute 55⅘ seconds in the half in 1885 and that stood for just ten years. On September 21, 1895, in a dual meet between the New York A. C. and Oxford and Cambridge in New York, Charles H. Kilpatrick, a Union College star, covered the distance in 1 minute 53⅗ seconds.

It was almost fourteen years later, September 15, 1909, that Emilie Lunghi, an Italian runner touring America, cut the record to 1 minute 52⅘ seconds at Montreal. Then, at the 1912 Olympics, came Ted Meredith's great 1 minute 52⅕ seconds dash and four years later his 1 minute 52⅕ seconds performance in a Pennsylvania-Cornell dual meet. Ten years and two months afterward, in London, Dr. Otto Peltzer, on July 3, 1926, set the present outdoor figure 1 minute 51⅗ seconds. Now comes Hahn to join the elect.

FREAK SHOT CLUB IS NOW REIGNING

List of Eligibles Presented in American Golfer.

Now that holes-in-one have been made on every year-old course in the land, the journalistic gentlemen who follow the game are digging up eligibles for a more exclusive mythical fraternity, the Freak Shot club.

All you need to become a member are the proper circumstances—and a ton of luck. If you happen to play your ball from its lie in a bird's nest plop into the hole, or if your hopeless hook ricochets from a tree and becomes a hole-in-one, you're in. And you are in good company, as witness this list of eligibles presented in the American golfer.

Willie MacFarlane got in through a barn door—two barn doors, in fact. He was playing against Harry Hampton at the Aberdeen (Scotland) club. They were fighting hole for hole when Willie sliced a drive terrifically. It pulled up near a barn, far off the fairway. But Willie, opening the barn door, found a second door exactly opposite and the hole on a line 200 yards away. He had to hit a hard drive, measured in inches to get through both doors. But he did it, stopping his ball within six feet of the hole.

Joe Demoss, former Wisconsin State champion, was matched with Warren K. Wood at Green Lake, Wis., when his drive from the eighteenth tee came down on top of a flat awning near the clubhouse. Demoss mounted the awning and, teetering precariously, slapped a beautiful brassie shot for the hole, ending a short chip-shot away.

Aubrey Boomer was as surprised as his gallery at the play that took him into the Freak Shot club. The English star was playing a Lancashire tournament, when his drive landed in front of a two-foot bank over which he had to play. Using his spoon, he gave the ball a vicious cut. But instead of arching through the air the ball disappeared completely. After a mystified search, Boomer incredulously drew the ball from his pocket. It had struck the soft earth at the top of the bank, rebounded and hidden itself while he still had his arms extended in completing the swing. And what do the rules say about that one?

In the 1926 Canadian Open at Montreal, Leo Diegel, then the titleholder, found himself looking hopelessly at the long eleventh hole in the practice rounds, says the American Golfer article. His one hope to escape the jinx, he concluded, was to drive toward the twelfth fairway, which ran parallel on the right, and let 'er hook. Twice he did it in the regular play, and both times the hooks described a perfect semicircle—but landed 350 yards away and in the center of the eleventh fairway.

Olympic Coach Schulte Never on Cinder Path

Track Coach Henry F. (Indian) Schulte of the University of Nebraska selected as one of the members of the 1928 United States Olympic team, never performed on the cinder path.

To his coaching credit, however, are many past Olympic performers and 1928 potential representatives.

There was the great Robert Simpson, who revolutionized hurdling and set world marks which only recently have been bettered. Jackson Scholz, speed marvel for more than a decade and still among the select, learned the art of sprinting under Schulte's direction. And now there are Roland Locke, holder of the world's furious record of 20.5 seconds, and Fait Elkins, American decathlon champion and record holder.

Badger Coach Organizes Amateur Baseball Team

Promoting amateur baseball in Wisconsin is the latest job assigned to Coach Leonard B. Allison, assistant athletic director at the University of Wisconsin, who has been appointed state athletic officer for the American Legion.

Allison was recommended for the post by Maj. John Griffith, commissioner of the western conference, who knew of his work in a similar position while at South Dakota State university. "Stub" as the Badger coach is better known, is making preliminary plans for a Wisconsin state baseball league.

Critz Hits Timely

Hughey Critz (shown in the photograph) has been hitting timely and fielding brilliantly for the Cincinnati Reds this season. The Cincinnati second baseman is one of the best in the league. Had he been going as well last summer the race might have ended differently.

Undefeated Wrestler

Ralph Lupton, Northwestern university's new wrestling captain, has never been defeated in two years of competition. His unique record started at Cornell college in Iowa two years ago, and, after a year's period of noncompetition, to comply with faculty regulations, he resumed his unbeaten string at Northwestern this year. He won both the Western conference and national intercollegiate titles at 125 pounds staged earlier in this season.

Will Help Aviators

Schenectady, N. Y.—A brilliant red arc light that makes use of the rare atmospheric gas neon, and which can shine through thick fog, has been developed at the research laboratory of the General Electric company here. The new lamp is the result of the work of Dr. Clifton G. Found, in collaboration with J. D. Forney of the Cooper Hewitt Electric company, and has just been demonstrated by them to engineers.

Airplane landing fields will probably be among the first to make use of the lamp, for by outlining the fields with them aviators flying above through fog will be enabled to make a safe landing. Such an occurrence as that of Commander Byrd on his flight to Paris, when he actually flew over LeBourget, but could not see to land, would probably be prevented.

Useful Also in Harbors.

Docks in harbors may also be marked with the lamp. According to Doctor Found, the light has been tested for this use when one was recently placed on a pier in the Hudson river. "Observations from boats during fog," he says, "have shown that it was possible to pick up the red neon light before any of the other lights in the vicinity were observed."

Earlier forms of neon tubes, which give the characteristic red neon light that is now so common in advertising signs, suffer from what is called the "cathode drop." This is the great difference in voltage between the electrode through which the electric current enters the tube and the near-by gas. On account of it, also, tubes must be operated with a high voltage, and must be made quite long in order to be efficient. Another disagreeable effect is that the gas is made to gradually disappear.

Gives More Effective Light.

The new tube of Doctor Found and Forney heats the cathode, or the electrode through which the current enters the tube, by means of an additional electric circuit. This causes it to give off the electrons which cause the neon gas to glow, but without the high voltages that are needed in the older tubes. By such means an extremely efficient source of brilliant red light can be obtained. Light of this color is best for penetrating fog.

Another possible use of the lamp is in photography, especially in colors. The mercury vapor lamp, which gives a characteristically violet colored light, has often been used for ordinary photography, but the unnatural pallor which it causes is a disadvantage, especially where colors are concerned. By combining the neon light with the mercury vapor lamp, the former supplies the red rays which are lacking in the latter, and the result, said Doctor Forney, is a good approximation to white light.

INFLUENCE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

MRS. WHARTON was talking to me about her son. He was an only child and had scarcely ever been away from her care a night in his life. His father had been dead ever since John was six, and it was to his mother's influence and direction that he owed the principles which actuated his life. He was just finishing high school now, and the question under consideration was his going to college. Should he stay at home and attend the local institution where he could continue to be under his mother's eye, or as he very much wanted to do, should he go to an eastern institution which some of his more intimate friends were attending? It was a question which it was very hard to decide and Mrs. Wharton was getting my opinion on the subject.

"I don't like to have him go away," she was explaining. "I should like to keep him under my influence for a little longer."

Mistaken mother! He would not go beyond her influence no matter how far he wandered. Influence of that sort is not dependent upon physical conditions. Sometimes distance and separation only tend to emphasize the strength of the influence which training and precept and example have had upon one.

My father held to very rigid principles of religious and moral conduct. The example which he set for me still has its potent influence upon my own procedure, though he has been dead more than fifty years. There were certain practices which in his eyes were objectionable but which in mine, with the different training I have received and the wider opportunity for observing manners and customs which I have had, seem quite unobjectionable, and yet I do not follow my judgment. I yield even today to the influence which my father had upon me long years ago.

A young newsboy has just come into the railway coach in which I am riding.

"Would you like a morning paper, sir?" he inquires. His voice is soft and pleasant; his manner is courteous; his hat is in his hand as he makes the inquiry. Some one has taught him good manners. His fourteen or fifteen years have been spent under the influence of a refined mother, I have no doubt, and it shows in the way he carries himself, in the intonation of his voice, in his quiet polite approach, and this same influence will be apparent twenty-five or thirty years hence in the way in which his own boy conducts himself.

It was the home influence which ten or a dozen years ago kept boys straight and clean and manly even though that influence had its inception four or five thousand miles away.

There is a little poem by Hattie Well Boynton which expresses this power of influence not weakened by distance:

They marveled at the lad—
So young, so strong, so radiant of cheer;
That he, from his soft life, could grapple death,
Could sing, and laugh and with exultant breath
Could die—and know no fear.

They marveled, but guessed not
That far beyond the west horizon's rim,
Through long, still hours of sleepless holy nights,
Wrestling with God, up to the star-lit heights,
His mother prayed for him!

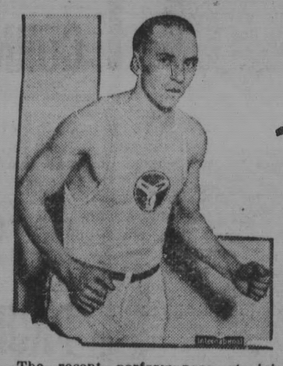
MAKES OLYMPIC TEAM



The recent performances of Joie Ray of the Illinois A. C., Chicago, in winning the marathon run from New York city to Long Beach, L. I., in the remarkable time of 2:34:13 2-5, and the capture of the special ten-mile race at Malden, Mass., not only makes Joie a certainty for the American Olympic team but also strengthens this country's chances in an event in which it has been weak for years.

FROCK FOR AFTERNOON

The cape theme, which strikes such an important note in this season's smartest fashions, is used to achieve a graceful effect in this charming afternoon frock of water-blue chiffon worn by Renee Adoree.

Note how gracefully the cape is employed, so that a novel one-sided effect is achieved through the cape falling over only one arm in rippling fashion. The diagonal neckline, seen on so many of today's smartest frocks, accentuates the one-sided effect of the frock. Note, too, the large soft bow attached with a rhinestone pin at the neckline.

The skirt is box plaited and the blouse is shirred in front to affect the fashionable tight girdle line across the hips.

A large picture hat adds a further summery tone to the costume.

Race Suicide Causing Little Worry in U. S.

Washington.—The race suicide outlook in the United States is not yet painfully apparent, judging by the latest statistical study of sterility reported to the National Academy of Sciences. From data furnished by the United States bureau of the census, Dr. A. J. Lotka has computed that the percentage of childless marriages among white people in America is 17 per cent. About 4 per cent of these are accounted for by divorce and the death of one matrimonial partner or the other, leaving an actual sterility rate of 13 per cent.

When it is taken into consideration that 78,207 out of every 100,000 white women eventually marry in this country of some 100 million population the proportion of childless families is considered not sufficient to cause grave concern to alarmists worried over the future of the race.

Stable Man Showed Grim Sense of Humor

Add to the true but trying stories of the week the case of the young lady who was most anxious to reach her gentleman friend posthaste. Knowing him to be an ardent horseman and confident that he was riding at the moment, she besought the telephone Red Book. With no more information than the fact that he rode a mount named Molly, she proceeded to query academy after academy.

Eventually, success was to be hers. Nearing the end of her list of numbers, her impatient "hello" was answered by a gruff-voiced stable man.

"Is this the Park academy?" she asked.

"Yep," answered the voice.

"Well, have you a horse named Molly?"

The answer shocked her into speechlessness.

"Sure," said the gruff one. "Shall I bring 'er to the phone?"—Detroit Free Press.

Prince's Simple Life on Ranch in Calgary

The prince of Wales, so they say, is developing an American accent. Seven years of annual association with the cowhands and neighboring ranchers at Calgary, Alberta, where he is owner of the EP ranch, have erased much of his carefully cultivated Oxford enunciation and substituted the drawl of the American Northwest.

The British royal heir even jokes about the change in his speech. A favorite story with him is one in which an American acquaintance explains that the difference between a ranch and a "rawnch" is that "a ranch pays and a 'rawnch' doesn't."

"But everybody in Calgary knows that the prince runs a ranch and not a 'rawnch'," says Chief Long Lance, a neighbor. "By 8:30 every morning he has breakfast and is out inspecting his cattle and barns. One of his chores is hauling manure in a wheelbarrow."—Los Angeles Times.

Color War in Edinburgh

Following the refusal of some restaurants to admit Asiatic and African residents, not because of their conduct, but because of their racial origin, Edinburgh has a color war that has gotten into the house of commons. The secretary for Scotland was asked to take steps, by legislation or otherwise, to stop the discrimination, and he replied that he did not have the power to intervene and did not think legislation along the line suggested would be practicable. A delegation of students representing the Edinburgh Indian association protested recently to the lord provost of Edinburgh, and the members of the organization refused to take part in the recent charity pageant.

His Experience

"Well, sir," said Dad Drizzle, "the children had got to playing around, the whole durn ten of 'em, I reckon. I wasn't paying no pertickler attention when I heered an almighty yell, and over the fence comes a heifer, blatting for gosh' sake with three, four arrers sticking out of her body. I gives another yell and darted into the house for my gun, hollering 'Injuns! Injuns!' at every jump. I hadn't been offm' the place for so long I'd forgot there wasn't no Injuns no more and just nacher'ly didn't suspicion the children a-tall."—Kansas City Star.

His Viewpoint

"A very promising young man," we said. "He will do big things."

"We have too thundering many 'going-to-doers' now," said old Festus Pester. "What we need are not men that are going to do, but those that have already done—we need 'didders,' not 'going-to-doers' or 'might-have-doners!' Hurrumph!"—Kansas City Star.

Blood Tests Seen as Aid to Police

London.—Suspected persons who tell detectives that bloodstains on their clothing are due to nose bleed or to cuts while shaving may now have their stories tested by chemical and microscopic methods, described to the Royal Institute of Public Health in London by Dr. Roche Lynch, expert in legal medicine.

Comparison of the "blood group" to which the suspected person belongs with blood in the stain often proves, Doctor Lynch said, that the blood is not self-shed, but must have come from some other person.

There are four recognized blood groups to which a person may belong, and it is possible to divide these into several subgroups, depending upon the presence or absence of specific chemical substances in the liquid part of the blood or in the solid corpuscles.

Tests for these substances can now be made, Doctor Lynch disclosed, on bloodstains at least a year old. It is sometimes possible to say not only that a bloodstain in question was not made by the blood of the suspected person, but that it probably did come from a murdered victim, if that is the truth.

This can be tried whenever a sample of stain known to be of the victim's blood is available for comparison.

There are some uncertainties, Doctor Lynch admitted, but he believes that these new blood tests should be used in criminal practice more often.

Cuba Will Turn Coast Defenses Into Parks

Havana.—Cuba is to transform its coast batteries into public parks, according to an announcement by Secretary of Public Works Carlos Miguel de Cespedes.

In Havana alone some ten blocks of valuable ocean front property, appraised at as many millions of dollars, contain antiquated earthworks mounted with unserviceable cannon that date from colonial times.

Since Cuba has no reason to anticipate a foreign invasion, it has been decided that coast defense artillery is unnecessary, and the batteries are being dismantled to make way for pergolas and flower beds.

Secretary Cespedes is also transforming several hundred section houses along the various highways of the republic into rural schoolhouses. Modern machinery has practically done away with manual labor in highway repair, it is stated, and the section houses, which were built two decades ago of substantial masonry, serve better purpose in the guise of schools.

Charlie Woke Up

New York.—Charlie Kiefhaber, truck driver, will be careful hereafter about taking a nap on his parked machine. When he did so in front of a skyscraper under construction a ten-ton steel boom fell 22 stories right through the truck. Charlie was awakened. Nothing else happened to him.

Old Iceboat Honored

Baltimore, Md.—The municipal iceboat Latrobe, which somewhat resembles a fat and asthmatic old lady, recently was elevated to a position approximating that of the British navy's battle fleet flagship.

With her nose in the air and her sides bulging, the Latrobe plodded past Fort McHenry and took a salute of 21 guns. Aboard the Latrobe were the Fifth Regiment Veteran corps and 400 guests, members of organizations from other states with military histories extending through the colonial days.

Army regulations state specifically that the 21-gun salute from an American fort shall be restricted to the President, or former President of the United States, the head of a foreign nation or a foreign ship of war, and, under certain circumstances, the flag.

Capt. Louis J. Harant, regimental adjutant, indicated that the salute, fired by a two-gun detachment from the One Hundred and Tenth field artillery, was intended for the flag aboard the Latrobe. Regulations state that an American ship shall not receive the salute from an American fort. So possibly the Latrobe was not recognized as a ship, but merely as the foundation for a flagstaff.

Neither President Coolidge, nor former President Taft, nor yet the Ameer of Afghanistan, was on board the Latrobe; so experts in army etiquette leaped to the conclusion that the Latrobe has been masqueradipg for many years and will show her true colors when a foreign fleet again attacks Fort McHenry.

The salute, whatever its import, welcomed the colonial organization to Baltimore to celebrate several anniversaries.

Diamonds Will Burn

As most of us think of the element called carbon it is hard to believe that diamonds are formed of it. This is true and if a diamond is heated to a very high temperature in a place that is airtight it turns to charcoal but if air gets to it, it will burn and form carbon dioxide.

Three Face Charges In Federal Court

Three men arrested here Sunday by federal officers and are charged with violating the national prohibition act. They were Harry Nicodemus, inn keeper of Woodside; Guiseppe Faitinni of Menlo Park and Frank Maybelle of Atherton. The places of all three men were raided in a series of raids carried out during Sunday afternoon. All three are out on bail and now face charges in the federal courts.

TITLED ENGLISH WOMAN CHANGES HER OPINION

In the recently published diaries of Lady Frederick Cavendish, two casual references are made to the telephone, indicating how little impression the new instrument made in Great Britain when it was introduced there fifty years ago.

The first reference is dated February, 1878, at Battle Abbey, and states: "Sun evening a wretched new craze called a telephone was brought into play, and F. kept at work shouting down it for a long time; on the whole a failure."

The next reference to the telephone was made in 1881 and by that time she had evidently become more reconciled to it, for she says, while writing at Hawarden, "That enchanting new marvel, a telephone, has been put up, whereby castle and rectory converse ad libitum. Uncle W., who is in some respects the greatest Tory, will have nothing to say to it." "Uncle W.," by the way was Mr. Gladstone.

BELL TOLL OPERATORS LOCATE MISSING GIRL

There are some 300 cafes in the city of Dallas, but this fact did not deter Long Distance telephone operators in the Dallas exchange from trying to locate a girl by the name of Guffey for whom a very urgent call had been placed from Kremlin, Okla. Miss Guffey had recently left her home for Dallas and all that was known about her was that she had secured employment in a cafe and that she received her mail at the general delivery window. She had been in Dallas only one week when the telephone call came through, informing her of the sudden death of her father.

In spite of having no address beyond that of the general delivery, three toll supervisors succeeded in locating the girl. First they tried between fifty and seventy-five cafes, but without result, when it occurred to one of the girls that a request might be made to the Dallas News to broadcast the fact that Miss Guffey's relatives wanted her to call Kremlin. This was done, and as a result, Miss Guffey was able to get in touch with her home at 1 A. M., four hours after the attempt to reach her had begun.
